Hearst Prosecution Begins Rebuttal

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Attorney F. Lee Bailey, who had just lost his second legal battle of the day, turned to the judge at Patricia Hearst's bank robbery trial and announced: "Your honor, the defense rests."

Bailey ended his 11-day presentation after U.S. District Judge Oliver J. Carter rejected a defense motion for dismissal of all charges on grounds the government had withheld evidence tending to show Miss Hearst is innocent.

The judge earlier refused to let the jury hear testimony from an expert on "speech patterns" who said the heiress' revolutionary statements on Symbionese Liberation Army tape recordings were written by members of the kidnap gang.

Twelve witnesses were called by the defense, with the 22-year-old defendant spending a week on the stand telling of being held in a closet, raped and threatened until she joined her kidnapers in the robbery to avoid being killed.

After the defense rested, Carter recessed the trial until today, when the prosecution begins its rebuttal testimony. The case could go to the jury late this week, but it is more likely to wind up early next week.

The defense wrapped up its case by charging the prosecution had withheld photographs made by cameras in San Francisco's Hibernia Bank which showed guns pointed at Miss Hearst during the April 15, 1974, holdup.

Defense attorney Al Johnson said enlarged stills made available to the defense only last week gave a different impression of what happened in the bank than smaller photos provided previously. Specifically, he said, the larger pictures showed SLA member Camilla Hall pointing a rifle at Miss Hearst.

But U.S. Attorney James L. Browning Jr. said the defense had access to the same movie negatives as the government. He also denied that the bigger photos were "exculpatory" evidence which would tend to clear Miss Hearst.

FBI photographic expert Vernon Kipping, called as the final defense witness, testified there was no attempt to deliberately "trim" anything in the original 5-by-7 inch stills made from the 413 frames of movie film taken by bank surveillance cameras.

But he acknowledged the larger 8-by-10 inch photos showed Miss Hall pointing a rifle in the direction of Miss Hearst while the smaller pictures left out the SLA member.

Dr. Margaret Singer of the University of California at Berkeley took the stand with the jury out of the courtroom to explain her "speech pattern" studies of tapes and writings by Miss Hearst during her 19 months in captivity.

She said her study showed Miss Hearst used her own words in just five of 25 sections of SLA tape recordings. The ones in which she stridently proclaimed revolutionary slogans and castigated her parents were written for her by members of the SLA, said Dr. Singer.

Carter ruled there was no precedent for testimony by an expert on speech patterns and that the trial, already in its sixth week, would be lengthened by several days if she took the stand with the jury present.

Miss Hearst's week of testimony about her kidnaping and her first months as an SLA captive was the highlight of the defense case.

The newspaper heiress, who spoke in a calm monotone with occasional faltering and dabbing at her eyes, said she pretended to join the SLA after being locked in closets for 57 days, raped and threatened with death.

She testified that she then became convinced she was an outlaw and would be killed either by the FBI or by the SLA and its radical allies if she tried to surrender.

Three psychiatrists who have studied the brainwashing of prisoners of war backed up her story, saying her treatment caused a "traumatic neurosis" which made her want to please her captors.

Judge Says Bundy Guilty, Kidnaping

he was afraid of being caught for fear it would embarrass his parents and friends.

After the verdict was announced, O'Connell told reporters he thought innuendo about other cases had contributed to his clients conviction.

"The turning point was when you people started bringing in other cases," said the attorney as he walked briskly from the courthouse.

For a year prior to his arrest, Hayward had been linking the DaRonch case to three other abductions in the area. Two young women were found dead and a third is still missing.

Police from Washington, Colorado and California also sent detectives to Utah to investigate Bundy as a suspect in a series of slayings of young women in those states.

Bundy, a former campaign aide to Washington Gov. Dan Evans, denied he had anything to do with the other cases, but refused to be questioned by police.

Hayward said Bundy's conviction would not curtail his investigation of the other abductions. "We are working on those cases just as intensely as ever," he said.

Action Deferred On County Lease and Hillyard said that Saturday, June 12, has been set for the tentative date.

They have drawn up a list of 11 agencies in Cache County which will be contacted and asked to participate. They expect the list to grow to about 25 agencies and will include junior high schools up through college and various civic organizations.

Mrs. Keller said it usually costs about $600 to put on the Town Meeting '76. This money comes from various sources, she said. This usually is from the sponsoring agency, civic clubs or fees charged to participants.

On the advice of Harris the meeting set Thursday at 7 p.m. to organize a citizen advisory committee and a technical advisory committee known as a task force, give input to the updating of the Cache County Master Plan and all land use problems in the county, was cancelled.

Harris recommended that the commissioners discuss the matter with the county's planning and zoning board which, under Utah law has the authority to set up such committees. Harris also recommended that the planning and zoning board adopt a set of rules and regulations.

Move Threatens Gun Control Bill

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House Judiciary Committee today voted 17 to 16 Tuesday to send a tough handgun control bill back to subcommittee — possibly killing any hope of passing gun control legislation this year.

Opposition was particularly centered on a provision which would have banned the sale, manufacture and importation of cheap, easily concealable handguns.

Chairman Peter Rodino said following the unexpected vote to sned the measure back to the House Crime Committee that it was impossible to say at this time whether pro-gun control forces could salvage the original measure.

The vote came as the committee was nearing the end of weeks of work on the measure.

But liberal supporters of the bill became increasingly critical of amendments being added to the measure which they complained had "gutted" key provisions.

Before the recommittal vote, the committee had voted 22 to 10 to allow either house of Congress to disapprove gun control regulations the Treasury Secretary could promulgate.

In addition to the ban on the sale of new, concealable handguns, the bill would have required a 21-day waiting period for the sale of handguns, limited purchases to one a month, provided mandatory sentencing for any crime committed with a handgun, and increased federal fees firearms dealers must pay.

Revenue Sharing Program Blasted

WASHINGTON (UPI) — For the past five years the federal government has used the $30.2 billion revenue sharing program "to cover a retreat" from questions on "poverty, racism, unemployment and urban decay," according to a report released today.

The 2½-year project, "Revenue Sharing: The Case for Reform," was conducted by the League of Women Voters Education Fund, Center for Community Change, National Urban Coalition, and the Center for National Policy Review.

"Despite initial administration disclaimers, the program has been used over the past five years to cover a retreat from the assumption of national responsibility to deal with problems of poverty, racism, unemployment and urban decay," the report said.

It said current fund distribution does not put the money where the need is greatest, particularly in the rural areas and central cities.

"A strong discriminatory impact on minorities and the poor" results from the present use of per capita income to determine where the money goes, and the report recommended substituting the percentage of people below the poverty level for the per capita income to address needs more accurately.

Black and Hispanic Americans along with women suffer discrimination both as job applicants and recipients of services at the hands of their state and local governments, the report found. It suggested that "because of the ineffectiveness of the Office of Revenue Sharing enforcement efforts," major responsibility should be transfered from the Treasury to the Justice Department.

The report said the federal government had failed to demand "basic elements" of accountability, and as a result, "funds provided by this massive program have sunk, largely without a trace — leaving in their wake neither new mechanisms for citizen involvement nor new plans or strategies for delivering needed services more effectively."

Filipino Nurses Linked To Deaths

DETROIT (UPI) — Federal prosecutors have named two Filipino nurses as being under investigation in connection with a mass murder case at the Veterans Administration Hospital in Ann Arbor last summer.

Prosecutors said an Indiana man, reportedly dying of cancer, was a key witness in the case and — in an unusual move — asked a federal court for permission to take sworn testimony from him before he dies.

The government, in a legal brief filed Monday, identified the nurses being investigated as Mrs. Leonara M. Perez, 30, a former Ann Arbor resident who now lives in Chicago, and Filipina B. Narciso, 29, of Ypsilanti.

The women were not charged by the government nor has a federal grand jury that began probing the case last November handed down any indictments.

The FBI entered the case last Aug. 15 after more than 40 cases of breathing failure, 11 of them fatal, raised suspicions among hospital officials.

Authorities said at least six of the deaths were suspicious enough to arouse fears that someone was injecting a fatal drug into patients.

The inquiries focused on a powerful muscle paralyzing drug derived from curare, a poison used by South American Indians on the tips of arrows.

In documents filed in U.S. District Court, federal prosecutors said Richard Neely, 61, of Osceola, Ind., was an apparent target for murder while a patient at the VA hospital last summer.

Prosecutors said Neely, who is suffering from cancer of the bladder and blood clots in the lung, told them he saw one of the two nurses in his room July 30 — at the moment he was injected with a potentially lethal drug.

Neely said he realized something was wrong and called the nurse to help him but that she whirled and walked quickly out of the room. Officials said they showed him several photographs of nurses and he identified Mrs. Perez as the one in his room.

Moynihan Tells Why He Backs Jackson

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (UPI) — Daniel P. Moynihan told a Yale University audience Monday night he might become secretary of state if Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., is elected President.

"He's the best candidate in the Democratic party because he's my best friend in the Democratic party," Moynihan said of Jackson.

Moynihan, who resigned last month as U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, said he supports Jackson's candidacy because Jackson opposes the diminishment of American power.

Moynihan said he would not rule out the possibility of returning to government service.

When asked during a student questioning period whether he would serve as secretary of state if Jackson became president, he replied, "What man or woman would pass up such an opportunity?"

Scranton Approved By Unit

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today approved the nomination of William W. Scranton to be U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations.

The nomination of the former Pennsylvania Governor was reported out favorably within an hour after he testified before the panel. Swift confirmation by the full Senate was expected. The panel's approval came in executive session and the vote was not immediately known.

In his testimony, Scranton said he favored closer cooperation and less confrontation with Third World members at the United Nations.

"I have a very deep personal concern about our relations with the Third World. I feel they should naturally be our friends, not naturally be our enemies," Scranton said.

The two major goals sought by developing nations, Scranton said, "are what we are all about." He identified those goals as "independence for their people l... and the opportunity to develop and create a better situation for themselves."

Scranton said he did not mean his remarks as criticism of Moynihan, whom he called "a close personal friend."

"I believe he did a great deal to improve the internal morale of this country. If confirmed, I would be proud to be his successor."

Moynihan pursued a controversial, hardline policy of confrontation with the Third World nations.

Scranton said, "I do think that maybe this confrontation was necessary because of the situation that developed there of strong bloc voting. But I believe there was more of a tendency to block the vote than to confront the issues. I do think we have had that confrontation. I think they do realize we want to help ... and that it is to their advantage to cooperate with us."

"I would hope that we could be more cooperative where they are cooperative, but undoubtedly we will have some confrontations with some African countries," Scranton said.

Scranton was asked by Sen. Dick Clark, D-Iowa, chairman of the African subcommittee, if he favored cutting U.S. foreign aid to countries that did not support the administration position in U.N. votes.

"That can be counterproductive," Scranton said. "But maybe it would be necessary to use it at some place, at some time."

Wallace Prefers Rallies

BOSTON (UPI) — In a political climate that calls for hand-to-hand campaigning with always-ready television cameras nearby, George Wallace conducts his Massachusetts primary bid with old-fashioned rallies and thoroughly tested speeches.

Today's Massachusetts race marks the Alabama governor's first primary in his fourth bid for the White House. Though confined to a wheelchair since the May, 1972 attack, Wallace has flown into Massachusetts week after week for rallies the past two months.

While his opponents for the Democratic nomination have kept staff members busy writing new speeches and developing gimmicks, Wallace has stuck to the same message, same format and, in many cases, the same jokes used since 1964.

His detractors call his approach hokey. They belittle the country warm-up band from the Grand Ole Opry playing music unfamiliar to New England audiences. Yet he has drawn larger crowds than anybody else.

Wallace says "life is too short to be bitter," but his familiar themes against bureaucratic indifference and left-wing media messages to the common man continue to impress his crowds.

At airport news conferences he rejects contentions that he is "pandering to the fears of the society." Yet he asks the rally crowds, "They say I only play on your fears. Well, aren't you afraid?" Cheers are the usual response.

He consistently says he doesn't expect to do well in Massachusetts, the only state to vote for Sen. George McGovern for president in 1972, yet everyone else in the campaign whispers of upset victory.
