Pair Convicted, Gets Life Sentences In 'Horrible' Moors Slaying Case

would have meant death by hanging. But capital punishment was abolished by parliament early this year for an experimental five-year period.

Can Win Paroles

Brady and Miss Hindley can be held for their rest of their natural lives. Britain's home secretary, however, can review their cases from time to time and parole them at his discretion. This is flexible, with no set period stipulated by law.

The judge could have recommended that they be held for a minimum period of years before being considered for parole, but he did not do so.

The all-male jury took two hours 14 minutes to reach a verdict after listening for 14 days to a story of perversity seldom equalled in the history of British crime.

They heard the tape-recorded screams and protests of Lesley Ann Downey shortly before she was murdered after a sexual assault. They saw pictures taken of her in the nude and of her grave.

They heard a graphic account of the brutal hatcheting of Edward Evans from an eyewitness to the killing.

And they heard of the discovery of the decomposed body of John Kilbride in a Moorland grave. How he died probably will never be known.

87 Witnesses

Eighty-six witnesses testified, the most remarkable of them being David Smith, 19. Never ruffled, he told the court how he saw Brady deliver 14 blows to Evan's head.

Although he has a police record for violence, Smith was the state's key witness. He went to the police after the killing because, he said, he wouldn't otherwise have been able to live with himself. He is married to Miss Hindley's sister, Maureen. In return for his testimony, the state gave him immunity from prosecution.

189 Exhibits

Of 189 exhibits introduced, one was a tape recording made by Brady while he and Miss Hindley were tormenting Lesley Ann Downey. Before the girl finally died, said prosecutor Sir Elwyn Jones, she was subjected to "unspeakable indignities" despite her pleas of "don't, please don't."

Judge Atkinson, in his five hour summation to the jury, placed his heaviest emphasis on this damning recording.

Merciless Light

"Brady and Hindley cannot escape from that," he said, "because it must, must it, not, throw a merciless light on the character and dispositions of persons who treat a little girl in that way."

Referring to the death of John Kilbride, whose decomposed but fully clothed body was found buried near that of Lesley Ann, the judge said:

"There was evidence of some perverted sexual treatment before death."
